The suit was an action for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaining while crossing defendant's railroad track near Bingham Junction. The plaintiff was driving across the track when his outfit was struck by a train. His wagon was reduced to kindling wood, his horses were both killed and he was painfully lajured. He alleged negligence on the part of the defendants in not ringing the bell nor sounding the whistle on their locomotive, and demanded damages in the sum of $6,000. Upon a hearing of the case the jury returned a verdict in his erritory. He came to the territory in 1862, and settled in Smithfield, where he
